Fire Pump and Fire Pump Room War Stories

Our speaker is Rick Dumont from Rosemont Engineering. Rick will be discussing various points of interest regarding “problems in the pump room”. Stories collected over the years of situations that could have been prevented with proper planning and a little common sense. This discussion will be in open forum style so feel free to ask questions about the application and installation of various styles of fire pump controllers.

Rick Dumont is a co-founder of Rosemont Engineering, Incorporated, the New England Representative for Firetrol fire pump controllers. At Rosemont, Rick has worked with fire pump controllers for over twenty years. He has conducted training seminars for engineering firms, worked to provide specifications for projects and has spent many hours in the pump room whether it be starting up a new system or troubleshooting those sold by his predecessors.

Rick’s background includes the U.S. Navy Avionics program, Reliance Electric and time with other systems integration firms. He partnered with Steve Rosa to form Rosemont Engineering, Inc. in 1988 providing various electromechanical systems to industrial clients throughout their territory. As a Firetrol Representative for more than 20 years, they have become a leading provider of sales and service support for the fire pump controller market.
